"An ideal moisturizer is balanced in all three sources of skin hydration: humectants, occlusive, and emollients. Using products containing a proper balance of these ingredients provides nourishment for beautiful skin worthy of enhancing – not concealing – with makeup."

Apri Zangl, CEO of HydratePepide

"Clients with oily or acneic skin often discount moisturizer's benefit for their skin type. What they are not considering is that oily skin produces more oil when it becomes dry. Therefore, a moisturizer's function of preventing the evaporation of moisture from the outermost layer of skin and helping to draw moisture back into the stratum corneum is essential."

Ahmed Abdulrah, M.D., CEO and founder of Text International, Inc.

"A moisturizer can treat, prevent, and correct any skin condition that is present on the surface of the skin, such as acne, pigmentation, wrinkles, sensitivity, dehydration, and dryness."

Monique Enriquet, CNRP, spokesperson for beauty brands

"The stratum corneum plays a crucial role as a water-impermeable skin barrier. Therefore, it is important to moisturize it. In order for the stratum corneum to remain intact, it must maintain flexibility and moisture. The epidermal layer acts as a barrier to water loss. Moisturizing the skin helps protect that barrier. With the realization that the stratum corneum is a dynamic and interactive tissue, new emphasis has been placed on agents that moisturize the skin."

Laura McDermott, L.E., vice president of clinical affairs and business development of NuGene

"In order to nourish the skin, encourage clients to apply an evening moisturizer before going to bed. This application will penetrate deep into the skin during the night, allowing the product eight or more hours to absorb. Clients should follow through with a lighter daytime moisturizer before applying sunscreen and makeup."

Maurice Steltz, founder of Cinema Secrets
